Subject Type: Optional

Module:

1. General information

1.1. Aims of the course

The subject and its expected results respond to the following objectives: Politics can not be abstracted from its sociocultural context nor from the changes that such context experiences. Therefore, the subject aims to address the political taking into account the different interpretations that sociology, philosophy and anthropology have given him, the importance of cultural variables in the deepening of democracy, the relationship of politics with violence (terrorism, wars, coups, etc.), the emergence of new values, the crisis of classical political actors (political parties and unions), the emergence of new actors (social movements, associations, NGOs, crowds), the crisis and emergence of ideologies, etc.

1.2. Context and importance of this course in the degree

The subject aims to contextualize the action of public policies. Specifically, it proposes to interpret the political environment that serves as the basis for decision-making. Such an environment will be interpreted in sociological terms, granting special relevance to cultural variables

1.3. Recommendations to take this course

Attend the classes, read the complementary readings, participate actively in the seminars and do the work. All this will require starting from a basic knowledge of political sociology that will be obtained with the bibliographic list delivered with the program at the beginning of the course. Among this bibliography we recommend very especially: Bergua, J. A. Sociology of Politics, Zaragoza, Mira, 2008

2. Learning goals

2.1. Competences

Upon passing the subject, the student will be more competent to ...

Interpret the sociocultural variables of political decision making

Accept that there are different forms of democracy and ways of interpreting it also different

Understand the contexts of change, conflict and crisis that influence public policy

2.2. Learning goals

The student, to pass this subject, must demonstrate the following results ... The student, passing this subject, will achieve the following results: - Explain the social and cultural reality that underlies any political phenomenon

- Identify the basic tools and devices used by public policies

- Recognize and evaluate the plurality of political activity manifested by different actors (parties, social movements, etc.) and ideologies

- Examine public policies paying attention to the political and social contexts from which they are implemented

2.3. Importance of learning goals

The subject will train the student to be sensitive to social and cultural reality. This will enable him to make more flexible the tools and technical devices that public policies use and adapt them to society. In the end, this will allow the graduate to be more effective.

3. Assessment (1st and 2nd call)

3.1. Assessment tasks (description of tasks, marking system and assessment criteria)

The student must demonstrate that he has achieved the expected learning outcomes through the following assessment activities According to the Agreement of December 22nd, 2010, of the Governing Council, which approves the Regulation of Learning Evaluation Standards of the University of Zaragoza, in its article Art. 9 in each subject there will necessarily be a global evaluation test , to which all students will be entitled, and which will be fixed in the academic calendar.

Those students who follow the subject regularly may develop a continuous assessment process. CONTINUOUS EVALUATION - EXAM to be carried out to evaluate the use of lectures and readings voluntarily made by the student from the extensive bibliography that is added later. The exam will consist of 10 questions that will be assessed with 1 point each. Therefore, a maximum score of 10 points can be obtained. It will be held on the day that the students and the teacher agree upon the end of the last subject of the subject
