The subject aims to provide students with the necessary strategies and foundations to approach the study of grammatical aspects of particular relevance, among the most controversial in current studies. An attempt is made to provide the theoretical tools that allow satisfactory explanations to be reached and also to evaluate the types of explanations offered by different methods.

A minimum level of Spanish B2 is required for students with a mother tongue other than Spanish.

When the situation allows it, work will be carried out in small groups with subsequent sharing. Theoretical explanation will be combined at all times with the analysis of examples that help to understand the explanations. Class sessions will include faculty presentations and student activities: solving specific problems and case studies. Special attention will also be given to counselling in the tutorials to promote self-learning and autonomous study, individually or in groups.
