Brief Introduction to the subject

Economic Administrative Law has become a high-profile legal discipline. The territorial issues, such as urban planning, understood as an economic sector as well as a public policy political sector, rounds the subject out. Thus, the subject allows the student to deepen the study of administrative sectors with a high social relevance, settling in the general knowledge previously acquired through its application to specific problems and leading to a potential specialization in administrative law. The subject is structured in four thematic blocks:

1. First thematic block: Economic constitution: content and limits of ownership right and business freedom. The European community framework. Public initiative: public sector and public enterprise. Trends limiting administrative intervention in the economy: liberalization, deregulation and privatization. Grants and other promotion measures.
2. Second thematic block: Public intervention and promotion of the private business in the industrial sector: industrial safety and quality.
3. Third thematic block: Regulated markets and administrative supervisors. In particular, the stock markets and credit institutions' monitoring
4. Fourth thematic block: Urbanism as a public policy and as an economic sector. Territorial planning and urban planning. Urban management and discipline. In particular, the duty of conservation and urban rehabilitation. Housing policies.
